Coaching young adults: the Gen Y conundrum

Described as "tech-savvy", "achievement-oriented" and "attention-craving", today's young adults, whatever their background, challenge their coaches to work in a world where the athletes' needs and expectations and the pace of change are just part of the challenge.

Our facilitator

David Haskins: When he retired last year David was a visiting lecturer at both Liverpool John Moores and Sheffield Hallam universities and he has a wealth of experience working with adults. Busier now than ever, he is a leading thinker, writer and speaker on sports coaching and will help our audience of coaches from all corners of the coaching world explore the issues.

Our speakers

Barrie-John Mather: an international player in both codes of rugby, B-J now works for the Rugby Football League as their Head of Player Development, a role in which he manages the expectations of the nation's most promising young performers.

Justyn Price: Street Games changes lives and communities by bringing sport closer to home for disadvantaged communities. Their Training & NGB Relationship Manager Justyn will explain how "doorstep sport" is changing the lives of young adults across Britain.

Each presentation will be followed by a Q+A session and the evening will end with a panel discussion involving members of the University of Manchester's own coaching workforce.
