

The Leisure Review symposium

Thursday 31 March – Friday 1 April 2011
Wadham College, University of Oxford

a new way of thinking

The concept

The Leisure Review is hosting a 24-hour symposium to provide an opportunity for senior practitioners and thought-leaders within the sport, leisure and culture sector to explore the future of the sector within the context of national policy and funding priorities. Through facilitated discussion and debate the symposium will create an environment for new and challenging thinking. Wadham College, Oxford will provide the appropriately scholarly setting for the event and delegate numbers will be limited to 80 to facilitate the exchange of ideas and perspectives.

The format

The emphasis of the symposium will be on providing delegates with opportunities for interaction with speakers, colleagues and peers, both formally and informally, throughout the programme. The opening afternoon will feature an expert panel to place sport, leisure and culture within the context of the new political and economic environment. Delegates will be invited to explore and challenge the panel's theses, offering their own view of a viable and sustainable future for the sector. This will be followed by The Leisure Review lecture, the centrepiece of the event, and the symposium dinner. The final morning of the symposium will comprise focused discussion groups exploring specific aspects of the previous day's debates. A closing plenary session will summarise the key conclusions of the symposium and seek to draft a communiqué relating to the future of the sport, leisure and culture sector.

Standard symposium rate

The full symposium delegate rate will be £270.00, a sum that rises to £317.25 with VAT at 17.5% and will unfortunately apply to anyone booking a delegate place after 29 October 2010.
